Dear NMPHA Members, Friends and Supporters:

NMPHA turns 100 years old in 2017! We are proud to be the oldest statewide volunteer-run association in New Mexico devoted to improving the health of communities by addressing three priority areas: social determinants of health, environmental justice and health access for all.

In honor of our 100th anniversary, we invite you to join us in supporting and celebrating NMPHA by sponsoring this upcoming signature event in Albuquerque. This event brings together hundreds of public health leaders from state and local government, health and human service-related non-profit organizations, universities, health care providers, and communities involved in local community health action and advocacy.

Our Annual Conference provides a key opportunity for professional education and training, as well as networking, for Association members and others throughout the state who are involved in innovative work to improve the health of our communities. Although we will be celebrating past history and all of the public health accomplishments that have had huge impacts on the health of populations in New Mexico for 100 years, we are making a special effort in this conference to look to the future as we build the next generation of public health leaders.

Two special keynote speakers will include Tom Quade, President of the American Public Health Association, speaking about "The Value of Traveling Upstream Together" and Aji Piper, a 16-year old environmental justice activist who is one of 21 youth plaintiffs suing the federal government in a landmark climate lawsuit. Aji inspires the next generation to get involved, using original songs to share his message and speaking out from rallies to national media, ranging from CBS and CNN to Huffington Post and Democracy Now! Other dynamic presenters will share inspiring ideas for how we can collaborate to improve the health of New Mexico and positively impact health outcomes now and for the century to come.
